Chennai, in Tamil Nadu, has the largest South Korean expat community in India, who love its weather and food, while many locals have become fans of K-pop and K-dramas.

Kalpana Sunder

Weekend visitors to the popular Tamil Nadu seaside town often head to the local malls or restaurants and grocery stores in the mini Koreatown, with Korean restaurants, video games and fashion stores across the city.

The InKo Centre in Chennai (above); InKo Centre director Rathi Jaffer (below left) and South Korean constable in Chennai Karun Young-seup.

Life@scmp.com

Weekend visitors to the popular Tamil Nadu seaside town often head to the local malls or restaurants and grocery stores in the mini Koreatown, with Korean restaurants, video games and fashion stores across the city.

The InKo Centre in Chennai (above); InKo Centre director Rathi Jaffer (below left) and South Korean constable in Chennai Karun Young-seup.

Life@scmp.com

Weekend visitors to the popular Tamil Nadu seaside town often head to the local malls or restaurants and grocery stores in the mini Koreatown, with Korean restaurants, video games and fashion stores across the city.

The InKo Centre in Chennai (above); InKo Centre director Rathi Jaffer (below left) and South Korean constable in Chennai Karun Young-seup.